

Scott Adair is the Director of Economic Development for the County of Humboldt, California. Scott is also a former Planning Commissioner, Trainer, Business Owner, and Commercial Real Estate Agent. He also remains an active community volunteer.

Scott possesses over eighteen (18) years of experience in real estate asset management and public/private economic development. Scott completed his basic economic development certification through BEDC (in partnership with Colorado State University) and he recently graduated from Oklahoma University's prestigious EDI (Economic Development Institute) program.

"As an economic development practitioner who is committed to promoting sustainable economic growth and community development, joining the board of directors for CALED would be a natural extension of my personal and professional mission. I am excited about the opportunity to work alongside fellow practitioners and thought leaders to advance the field of economic development and to advocate for policies and initiatives which support economic well-being in throughout our state and in our communities."
